Remember that entire online debate about banning porn? Remember all the results it yielded? Oh yeah, nothing fucking came of it. But what did was the New York Times writes one article documenting the abuse and exploitation minors have experienced through the site.

> Serena K. Fleites, 19, was 14 when a boy she had a crush on asked her to make a naked video and send it to him. She did, and it ended up on Pornhub.

Leftie progressive Nicholas Kristof wrote the op-ed, and offered three solutions to the problem of child exploitation.

> I don’t see any neat solution. But aside from limiting immunity so that companies are incentivized to behave better, here are three steps that would help: 1.) Allow only verified users to post videos. 2.) Prohibit downloads. 3.) Increase moderation. These measures wouldn’t kill porn or much bother consumers of it; YouTube thrives without downloads. Siri Dahl, a prominent porn star who does business with Pornhub, told me that my three proposals are “insanely reasonable.”

This is the kind of sane policy that companies can get behind. Simply wanting to ban pornography, as much as I like to do that, is not a reasonable goal right now. Kristoff summed up the problem of PornHub beautifully.

> The world has often been oblivious to child sexual abuse, from the Catholic Church to the Boy Scouts. Too late, we prosecute individuals like Jeffrey Epstein or R. Kelly. But we should also stand up to corporations that systematically exploit children. With Pornhub, we have Jeffrey Epstein times 1,000.

Amen to that. PornHub responded not only be meeting Kristof's suggestions, but exceeding them.

> 1. Verified Uploaders Only
>
> 2. Banning Downloads
>
> 3. Expanded Moderation, including a Red Team to solely moderate and remove illegal content and the use of AI software
>
> 4. Trusted Flagger Program – including multiple non-profits, hotlines and foundations dedicated to ending child exploitation around the world
>
> 5. NCMEC Partnership – voluntarily partnered with the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children in order to transparently report and limit incidents of child sexual abuse material (CSAM)
>
> 6. Transparency Report – In 2021, we will release a Transparency Report detailing our content moderation results from 2020. This will identify not just the full number of reports filed with NCMEC, but also other key details related to the trust and safety of our platform. Much like Facebook, Instagram, Twitter and other tech platforms, Pornhub seeks to be fully transparent about the content that should and should not appear on the platform. This will make us the only adult content platform to release such a report.
> 7. Independent Review – As part of our commitment, in April 2020 we hired the law firm of Kaplan Hecker & Fink LLP to conduct an independent review of our content compliance function, with a focus on meeting legal standards and eliminating all non-consensual content, CSAM and any other content uploaded without the meaningful consent of all parties.

My hope is that other pornography sites follow suit, and given that PornHub is the largest and most well known, it stands to reason that other sites will indeed follow suit. In conclusion, let me offer a reflection on this entire matter.

> Lol, one NYT article did more to restrict pornography than every elected conservative politician in this country put together. If you want policy change, you have to influence the left. Important to realize what a scam conservatism is for anything beyond taxes and war.

Conservatives are worthless, it is the left that understands how to affect change.
